Historic Name: North Slope Historic District Park

Built: 2002

Site ID#: U1017

Architect/Builder/Contractor:

Style: North Slope Historic District Park

Parcel Number(s): 2038210080

Classification: Non-Historic, Non-Contributing

Description: The Park consists of a grass border along the streets, trees and shrubs near the play area. The playground equipment is located in the area where Tacoma Power had their transformers, and was designed especially for tots. There are still some of the old signs and fencing left over from the Substation days.

The North Slope Historic District Park was dedicated, on June 8, 2002, to the memory of Valerie Sivinski, Tacoma's Historic Officer at the time the North Slope Historic District was started.

Cultural Data: The North Slope Historic District Park is located on a property that Tacoma City Light obtained in Nov., 1951. Tacoma City Light purchased a vacant lot for a "Distribution Yard"; the city was growing and needed more electrical capacity. A photograph taken in November, 1953, shows transformers with connecting power lines indicating that the "yard" was ready for service.

The term, "Distribution Yard" gave way to "Substation" and the K St. Substation remained in active service until late 1983, according to information obtained from Tacoma Power. When the method of power distribution changed and the K St. Substation was decommissioned, it sat vacant for years with the transformers still in place, but disconnected. After removing all the power equipment, the lot was still left vacant, on purpose, giving Tacoma City Light time to verify that the land was not contaminated and could be put to other use.

The local residents noted that Tacoma Power (the new name, since 1989, for Tacoma City Light) had a vacant lot and wondered what would become of it. There were many discussions on a method, any method, that would prevent another apartment complex from being built in the middle of the North Slope Historic District. It was Kelly Halligan who suggested a "Pocket Park". That sounded like an excellent idea, but no one could figure out a way to purchase the property. Thea Foss bond money became the solution and source of funds for the purchase of the park.

At last, on July 26, 2000, Tacoma Power approved the sale of the property for $30,000. The City of Tacoma became the owner of the property in April, 2001. With the city owning the land, and an agreement that Metro Parks would maintain the park, the North Slope Historic District Park was built. 2002

He attended Friends Bloomington Academy, Earlham College, and Indiana State University, the latter of which while he was teaching in country schools. He was the principle of an Indiana High School for a few years, then followed his parents to Tacoma in 1902. Since there were no teaching or principle positions available, Hunt drove a truck for the West Coast Grocery company. After eight months he obtained an 8th grade teaching position at the Central School. He went on to serve as Stadium High School's principle from 1912-1928 and then became assistant superintendent of Tacoma schools. When he passed away in 1937, one obituary stated that he was a "philosopher" and "humorist" and "student", and "His was the rare ability to see two sides to every question". Finally, it states, "Simplicity, kindness, optimism, sterling honesty- these were the outstanding traits of character of this kindest, gentlest, most understanding of men."
